1994 Map

ASU's map has changed a lot in the last ten years. The Dean B. Ellis Library addition had just been dedicated when this map was created in 1994. Since that time, the old Physical Plant building that housed campus police has been torn down and a new police headquarters has been constructed. Computer Services has moved from the pink, metal building, which sat near the Library, to a new state of the art facility next to the Physical Plant. The Fowler Center has been built to provide space for performing art students, apartments have been added for more student housing, and a parking garage opened in the spring semester of 2002. While many changes have been made in the past ten years, these were just "a bump in the road" compared to what was expected in the next few years.

You are here

Yellow marks the spot...even while "you are here" the ASU map is changing all around you. The new Reng Student Services Center began to rise from the mud during the summer as workers welded steel and poured concrete, connecting the new building with the current Reng Center. A majority of the Indian Village trailers were moved and new married family housing is being built in their place. Ground was broke for a new health center and the new Biosciences/Biotechnology Building in the fall and a section of Caraway Road was closed to allow for construction. Construction on the new Track Complex also began during the summer and plans are underway for an amphitheatre between the Library and the Computer Science and Mathematics building.

A long road ahead

As we watch new buildings go up around campus, plans are already underway to add other facilities and make additional road changes. A new liberal arts building has been designed and is waiting further funding and approval before construction is scheduled to begin. The building will stretch across Caraway Road, forever changing the ASU map. Plans were also underway for a new Alumni Center on University Loop East near the Pavilion. On completion of the Reng Student Services Center, Phase Two of construction will move into the current Reng Center, built in 1964, to update the space. Talks were also underway on building a new business structure. Although the university has made great advancements in facilities in the past few years, we still have "a long road ahead" with projects that are scheduled to begin soon.

Student Life

Map Provided By: ASU Creative Services

Students from “all over the map” gather at ASU every fall for a new year and a new beginning. Freshmen have no idea what they’ve gotten themselves into and seniors are awaiting their completion. New friendships are established as old ones fade into the past. Students get involved in social and religious organizations, as well as professional and academic clubs. While in school, students have many opportunities to become involved across campus. Homecoming, Springfest and Welcome Week are just a few of the university activities held each year to allow students to encounter more of college life. As seniors leave, they take this college experience back to their hometown and to new places they will go in the future.

Stafford and Frigo from Z100 The Fox interview students as they kick off Springfest with a live radio broadcast from ASU. Monday's highlights consisted of a picnic lunch on the lawn and Relay for Life.

Hugo Ferriera, lead singer of Tantric, sings Wednesday at a concert as Springfest comes to a close. Further Down also performed that night at the Convocation Center.

Brett Rosenberger wins the drag contest. Each team member was asked to raise a minimum of $100 before the event. In order to raise money, teams solicited donations, held garage sales, washed cars and more. More than $4,500 was raised for the American Cancer Society during the event.

Felicia Jackson, a chemistry major from West Memphis, searches in the ASU Bookstore for the books she needs for her classes. Students took their schedule to the bookstore to find all the books listed that they would need for their classes. The bookstores hired additional help during the busy season.

Chemistry major Jennifer Woodruff pays the remainder of her balance on her account at the cashier's window. Students had to pay their account balances at the beginning of the school year. Students who did not pay their bills on time could be removed from the dorms, have their meal cards turned off and be dismissed from classes.

Students purchase their books during the first week of classes. Sometimes the lines were very long in the ASU bookstore, which was located in the Reng Center. The bookstores were often packed as everyone tried to buy all of their books for classes. Students also often price compared between the bookstores trying to find the best deal on their books.

Ben Tracy, a computer science major from DeWitt, fills out a form to receive a parking sticker at the University Police Department. It was required that all students, faculty and staff get a sticker or a hang tag to mark their car. Those students caught without a permit would receive a parking ticket.

Sophomore Ashley Thompson, a pre-vet major, checks the status of her account before classes start. The cashier's office was a very busy place during the first few weeks of school. Students could present their identification at the cashier's window and see how much money they had left to pay on their account.

A blood bus is on campus during the first week of school to run a blood drive for the students. The students who participated had to fill out a lot of paperwork before they were eligible to donate blood. The paperwork asked many questions about present and past health of those wanting to donate.

Arkansas State running back Danny Smith, a senior computer engineering major from Cleveland, Miss., is brought down by a Mean Green defender. Smith carried 21 times for 81 yards with an 11 yard touchdown run. Smith accounted for 72 percent of Arkansas State's rushing yards against North Texas.

Alex Peoples runs down the field on a special teams coverage. At the safety position, Peoples, along with other defensive backs, limited the Mean Green to 80 net yards of passing. Peoples was a sophomore management information systems major from Texarkana.

As the Indians approach one of the many first downs of the game, the Arkansas State offense awaits the snap of the football. In the first ten of thirteen games, the 2002 Indian offense had a combined yardage of 304.3 with 156 yards on the ground and 148.3 yards in the air. There was a total of 133 points scored between them.

The loop around campus has been renamed University Loop East and University Loop West. The loop was the only way to get to some buildings on campus after the road closings and parking lot changes.

Just when the parking situation seems it can not get any worse, things take a dramatic turn. Caraway Road was to be closed from University Loop East to the Fine Arts Complex after the groundbreaking for the new Bioscience building on Sept. 8.

There are a few new landmarks behind Kays. Residents of Kays and University were promised extra security when the gates were installed, allowing only those with card access to the dorms to park in the lot behind Kays. A group of students, faculty, staff and people of the community participate in the Alpha Phi Alpha March in below freezing temperatures. The march was held on Tuesday, Jan. 21 at 4 p.m. Immediately following the march, a candlelight vigil was held in the Ballroom of the Reng Center.

Dr. J.W. Mason, Associate Vice Chancellor of Human Resources, sings as the march begins just off the steps of Arkansas Hall. When Martin Luther King week ended on Jan. 17, the work of students will not. This year marked another year in civil changes, but there was still a lot to be done in the fight for equality.

Members of the United Voices Choir sing during the Candlelight Vigil. To remember King, and the changes he helped bring about, the United States declared in 1986 that his birthday, Jan. 20, would be a national holiday, and it has continued to be recognized as such. King helped bring about desegregation in schools, on buses, at water fountains and movie theaters. He showed there was no difference between the races.

Eric Phillips, a junior electrical engineer major from Blytheville, is signing up for a day of service to "put something back into the community". The remembrance of King's birthday helped to remember what King had done. He acted as a symbol for equality while he was living, and more than 30 years after his death he was still one of the most recognized among the population.

What was once Aggie Road is now a bustling construction zone. Work began on Phase One of the Reng Student Services Center in the fall of 2001.

The construction site is only feet away from the Reng Center. Phase two of the project was to interconnect with the existing Reng Center which was to contain student services areas, updated kitchens, an expanded bookstore and meeting rooms.

A crane towers over the student center construction site as a worker stabilizes a concrete support beam on the upper level. The upper level was to contain a fitness and wellness center, an auditorium and meeting rooms for student and alumni functions. The center was built to make facilities commonly used by students more accessible by placing it in a central location.

Are we there yet?

The phrase "Are we there yet" has many different meanings to students throughout the school year. We count the days until graduation, we anticipate Thanksgiving, Christmas and spring break. We can't wait until Friday, the day school ends and the weekend begins. We study late into the night and wake early to head off to another day of classes, homework, meetings, projects, the library, work and family. We do it every day because we have to. Because for now, that's our life. Although college is a long, hard road, we are here for a reason. The reason: An education to establish the rest of our lives.

In their soils mechanics lab, Travis Brasher, a senior engineering major of Osceola, and Ken Collins, a junior engineering major of Jonesboro, watch as a machine in the engineering department does an undefined compression test on a soil sample. Brasher watched the machine, reading off the measurements to Collins who then took down the notes.

Senior Benjamin Browning, a civil engineering major of Judsonia, checks the readings on the machine that he has been assigned to work on in his civil engineering materials lab. Civil engineers brought together many disciplines and professions to try and create a better tomorrow. Also, a career in civil engineering provided challenges, diversity and opportunity.

Dr. William Crumpton, one of the professors in the engineering department, jokes with the class while pulling out his notes for his engineering economics class. As technology becomes more complex, engineers have the opportunity to become even more specialized. With this expansion of technology, new engineering careers were expected to become available.

In their civil engineering materials lab, Micheal Davidson, a senior civil engineering major of Jonesboro, and his partner Benjamin Browning, a junior civil engineering major of Judsonia, perform testing on concrete specimens. Civil engineers did anything from designing tunnels to producing computer controlled mirrors that provide solar power for electricity.

Casey Puckett studies in the hall of the business building before class begins. Puckett was a senior business administration major of Forrest City. ASU business students were exposed to actual challenges in the community and gained first hand experience in projects such as marketing potential and analyzing structure of nearby businesses.

Two students study hard for upcoming finals in the Business building. The College of Business offered several student organizations in which both undergraduates and graduates could take part. Many of them were major related, while others were honors organizations or simply dealing with business.

Len Frey, professor in the College of Business, reads over materials for class. Teachers had office hours for students who needed help outside of the classroom time provided. Professors were also available to help advise students on what classes they should take.

Micheal Person tightens the chute as he positions the cow in place. Students learned the reproduction processes of different types of animal breeds. Person, a junior agriculture education major from Searcy, put his knowledge into action.

Whitney Jones, a junior plant science major from Carlisle, listens intently to his turf management professor. The characteristics, adaptations and establishments of different grass types were distinguished between during this class. Students went out and observed different types of turf for a first hand view of what they learned.

Melissa Smith, a junior horticulture major from Mountain View, works on her sketches for her landscape and design class. In this class, the use of trees and shrubs in landscaping were emphasized.

Agriculture students call it a day as they leave the ASU farm. The students spent their time working with cattle. During this class, the students separated the heifers from the calves.

Sarah Shahan, a freshman pre-veterinarian major from Marion, hesitantly takes her turn in the cattle chute. By the look on Shahan's face, this was not her favorite part of the educational process. This portion of the class made several students nauseous.

The catheter procedure was one of the most difficult procedures to learn the first semester. In nursing school, students could not make below a 70 percent on tests or practicals without having to make it up.

Developmental reading professor, Mrs. Ferrell, reads a few pages of John Grisham's "A Painted House." Ferrell had different teaching methods such as using the overhead, lectures and sometimes reading to the class. The developmental reading class was a non-credit course and offered basic review of reading skills.

Robin Smith, a freshman nursing major from Wynne, turns in an assignment to Mrs. Ferrell in strategies for college success. Freshman studies offered non-degree credit courses designed to improve language functions (vocabulary, spelling, reading and writing). These courses were available to all students in the University, but freshman who had low ACT scores were required to take the courses.

Chosen Who's Who at ASU

Ninty-nine students were selected for Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges during the fall semester. In order to be eligible, students had to have a minimum of 60 credit hours and a 2.5 GPA. Graduate students had to have a 3.5 GPA and a minimum of 12 hours at ASU.

Candidates were chosen by a committee based on their academic achievement, citizenship, service to the institution, leadership in academics and extracurricular activities. The committee also considered each applicant's plans for the future. Students were able to apply through the SGA office or their dean's office.

A banquet was held for all of the Who's Who students at the Fowler Center on Dec. 2. The students were able to bring their parents, spouse or a friend. Recepients were presented with framed certificates.

The Beauty of Ice Storm 2002

Ice clings to a tree that shimmers in the sunlight as if it is afire. The ice storm, which left two inches of ice on the campus, caused many students to stay home on "dead day" and study for their finals. The first day of finals was postponed due to icy roads.

The Library/Museum sign is covered in ice after a night of freezing rain on Dec. 4. Although the University was closed on "dead day", the Library was open for students to study for finals. Although many students did stay in and study for the finals for Thursday finals, the Associate Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs and Senior Administrator, Lynita Cooksey, said that there was a good chance of the ASU campus being closed for the first day of finals.

With all the trees dancing in color from the sun bouncing off the ice, the clock tower stands tall over the beautiful scene. Because of the danger, the area between the library and Wilson Hall was roped off to keep students out from under falling branches.

Among all the rumors of finals being put off and studying for finals, it was hard to notice the uncanny beauty that was present, even in something as small as a cluster of red berries. Many students walked around campus taking pictures of the scene.

Nothing on campus was spared from a coat of ice. Lynita Cooksey, Associate Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs, said that it would be too confusing to open the University late for the first day of finals, and that they would have to move the finals for that day to the following Thursday, Dec. 12.

Many limbs and branches could not support the weight of two inches of ice. The sound of snapping limbs could be heard all day Wednesday as ice began to melt. Many members of facilities management worked Thursday clearing limbs and cutting branches. Although the roads were clear by Thursday, falling limbs made campus too dangerous to walk around.

Get the show on the road

Map Provided By: ASU Creative Services

Every year the Greeks host and participate in many shows, including Homecoming Step Show, Variety show, Mr. Greek Adonis and several more. A lot of time and energy are put into these activities to build spirit, show support and to form life long friendships. Greeks contribute much support to the university and the campus athletic programs. Greek life, however, includes much more than putting on shows. They are responsible for hosting various philanthropies throughout the year, thus helping the community around ASU. Being a Greek isn't always just about having fun. It's about taking your abilities and talents to different places and projects on campus and across the community.

The Greek 101 facilitators take time to pose for a group picture. Greek 101 was held in the Reng Center ballroom. Each fraternity and sorority had one or two members represent them as facilitators.

New members from each fraternity and sorority break up into small groups to learn basic information. They discussed benefits of being part of the ASU Greek community. Each group had two Greek 101 facilitators to answer any questions they had.

The new members participate in activities that help them get to know each other. Some of these activities have been passed down from year to year. Fraternity and sorority members were not allowed to wear their organizations letters to represent Greek unity.

Hanna Wimpy proudly represents Alpha Gamma Delta as she is crowned Miss Creek Pledge 2002. Wimpy also won the talent skit portion of the pageant by singing "Jail House Rock." Miss Creek Pledge was held in memory of Marcus Murphy of Lambda Chi Alpha and Adam Brown of Alpha Gamma Rho.

Danielle Crafton, a member of Chi Omega, dances to a skit from Saturday Night Live during the talent competition. The judges rated the contestants in three categories, including costume (30 points), talent skit (40 points) and evening gown (30 points). The Cream of the Crop award was given to the new members of Chi Omega for the best overall appearance, spirit and participation throughout the event.

Kristen Honey, a member of Delta Zeta, dances during the costume competition in a DZ bubble gum costume. This was the 13th year for the men of Lambda Chi Alpha to sponsor the pageant. Foster Logger was the emcee.

Heather Young, representing the men of KA, dances to "It's Raining Men." Young, members of Alpha Gam, and KA entertained the enormous crowd. The admission cost was $5.

Fraternity members support the Chi Omega's by bowling to raise money for the Make-a-Wish foundation. This was the second annual bowling tournament sponsored by the Chi O's. Prizes were awarded for the winning team.

Greeks work to support others in Northeast Arkansas

Sigma Pi's show school spirit while supporting Greek philanthropies. Sigma Pi's held an annual blood drive to support the American Red Cross. They also held Oozeball in the spring to raise money for St. Jude Children's Hospital.

Fraternity and sorority members play flag football to support the Tau Kappa Epsilon's. Each year, TKE fingerbowl was held at Indian Stadium. A competition was held each year to see who could raise the most money for the event.

Ryan Collins, a member of Pi Kappa Alpha, tries to bowl a strike for his team. The Pi Kappa Alpha's held the Lil' Olympics in the Spring for all the sororities. They were also involved with the Miss ASU Pageant, which was Arkansas' largest preliminary pageant for Miss Arkansas.

Students of ASU come together to help children in need

Blake Bradley serves as Executive Director of Up Til Dawn. Up Til Dawn was a fundraising program that united faculty, students and the local community in a goal to help the children of St. Jude Children's Research Hospital. Not only did students lead Up Til Dawn on campus, but they also educated the community about St. Jude.

Members of Up Til Dawn's Executive Board smile for a quick picture while visiting St. Jude's Hospital. St. Jude was the largest childhood cancer research center in the world in terms of the number of patients enrolled and successfully treated.

Chris Kindrick, a junior graphic design major of North Little Rock, fills out a participant application for the event. Teams of five were asked to raise $50 by the final event. Participants were able to meet patients and others who had benefitted from St. Jude at the last event. Many participants agreed that this was the most rewarding part of the Up Til Dawn experience.

Participants compete in the pie eating contest held at Up Til Dawn's final event. With various activities throughout the night, participants never lost track of their purpose. Since St. Jude opened in 1962, it has treated more than 18,000 children from across the U.S. and 60 countries.

The Executive Board of Up Til Dawn smiles for a picture in front of St. Jude's Hospital. In their trip to Memphis, they toured the hospital and the Ronald McDonald House. St. Jude was the first institution established for the sole purpose of conducting basic and clinical research into catastrophic childhood disease.

Serena Burchett, of Jacksonville, and Jared Walker, of Mountain Home, try to sneak in some sleep during the final event. Participants stayed awake a full 24 hours to honor the hours that these patients are awake each day of the year. The theme of the event was "Months of the Year."

Josh Williams, a sophomore, and Mary Reed, a junior graphic design major, dress up as Indians for the final event. St. Jude had approximately 4,000 patients in active status. ALSAC/St. Jude payed all the costs not covered by insurance for medical treatment. Families without insurance were never asked to pay.

Beth Montgomery and Allison Slinkard, members of Alpha Omicron Pi participate in the hoochie coo race. The goal was to wrap a ball attached to a string on the pole around the pole as quickly as possible. The event was held Nov. 1.

The members of Alpha Gam and Chi Omega compete for the spirit competition. Each sorority made signs and banners to show that they supported the Greek rodeo. Greek Rodeo was held at the ASU's farm complex.

On the road again

ASU athletes are "On the road again" this year traveling to games, meets and matches. While some trips home are happier than others, all are worth the trip. As the construction of the new football complex and track facilities continued, a new athletic director joined the ASU program in July after a six-month stint by the previous director. The year began with a resurgence in the football program, drawing crowds and support for the new coaching staff and the young team. The baseball team also started out their season with a new coaching staff after 11 years of coaching by Bill Bethea, who retired at the conclusion of the 2002 season. While some programs had a more successful year than others, all of the athletes enjoyed the trip.

Arkansas State Football

Given too much room, wide receiver James Hickenbotham, a sports management major out of Roanoke, Va., takes advantage of the open secondary, with only a Middle Tennessee State cornerback to contend with. In 2001, Hickenbotham was named first-team All-Sun Belt as a return specialist and was named SBC All-Purpose Player of the Year.

Running back Danny Smith, a senior computer engineering major out of Cleveland, Miss., cuts to the outside looking for some room to run. Smith rushed for a total of 154 yards against Middle Tennessee State's defense. Smith grabbed his third straight 100 yard rushing game in the game against Middle Tennessee State.

Wide receiver Chuck Walker, a sophomore biology major out of St. Louis, Mo., blocks a Middle Tennessee State cornerback, opening the secondary for Arkansas State's running back. Without good blocking in the secondary, the running game would have been ineffective.

As a linebacker from Middle Tennessee State tries to knock down a pass from Arkansas State's quarterback, center Josh Long, a sophomore of Forrest City, calmly snaps the ball, while offensive lineman Kimani Jones, a junior of Mound Bayou, Miss., and tight end Mike Brooks, a sophomore of Richardson, Texas, keep a Middle Tennessee blitz from getting to their quarterback.

Bringing down the Middle Tennessee State halfback just past the line of scrimmage, Arkansas State's defense held up to the call in the win over Middle Tennessee, 13-7. With the win over MSTU, Arkansas State put down the Sun Belt conference's favorite team.

Dropping back on a play action, trying to deceive Middle Tennessee State's secondary into falling back for pass coverage, giving his running back an extra few seconds, quarterback Elliot Jacobs, a sophomore exercise science major of El Dorado, holds "the ball" at his side shielding it from an oncoming pass rush.

The shirtless B.C.M. guys bare it all at the Little Rock game. Dedicated fans made a rode trip to the capital to watch the Indians take on San Jose State. Although the Indians lost, the fans still enjoyed themselves.

Number 13, Jason Wood, a pre-med major out of Sheridan, prepares for the game at Little Rock. Wood, a sophomore wide receiver caught three passes for a total of 19 yards.

Chris Hogan, a defensive end, takes a breather as the Indians offense takes the field. Hogan was a junior corporate finance major from Stone Mountain, Ga.

Preparing for the snap, the offensive line of Arkansas State waits for the oncoming rush of Middle Tennessee's defensive line. Because of the excellent blocking, ASU's half-back was able to have a field day against favored Middle Tennessee State. Also, a huge fan turn out gave the Indians the extra boost they needed to surpass MTSU.

Wide receiver Chuck Walker sprints down field giving ASU's quarterback the option for a deep ball. Walker was a sophomore marketing major from St. Louis, Mo. The previous year at the Blue Raiders homecoming game, Arkansas State was beaten 54-6. With that loss still fresh on their minds, ASU came out looking for revenge.

Travis Easterling, a junior from Harrisburg, jumps in a line out to receive the ball from the hooker throwing it in. A line out occurred when the ball was kicked or ran out of bounds. The two teams lined up forming a tunnel between them. As the hooker threw the ball into the tunnel, a jumper was lifted into the air to retrieve it. The Old Boys won the game 7-0.

Team Captain Aaron Phillips, a junior nursing major from Little Rock, picks the ball out of a ruck and attempts to take it forward. "I play for the love of the game. I am addicted to it, like I have an adrenaline dependency," he said. "These guys are like brothers. We spill our blood on the field and know how to have fun off the pitch."

Lee Steinbeck, a junior biology major from Cherry Valley, and John Carvell, a junior journalism major from Jonesboro, practice passing skills Thursday afternoon. The best way to get some playing time was to come to practice and play with the guys. "Coach Huckaby asked me to join for the last two years, so finally I came to practice and I became hooked," said Carvell.

Steven Stubblefield, a freshman physical education major from Rivercrest, catches the ball during practice. Practices were Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays at 5 o'clock in the afternoon at Kays Field. "I play wing position. I receive the ball and run up the field to score the tris [goals], which are worth 5 points," said Stubblefield.

Where are we going?

Map Provided By: ASU Creative Services

ASU is overflowing with a variety of people. Some students come from different countries, some from only miles away. Some students are returning to college to achieve yet another degree, while some return to complete their education that they've put on hold for years. With disagreements between the faculty and staff senates with the administration on how to best run the University, students try to keep their heads above water managing school and work. While the administration and board of trustees drive the car that directs the University, the faculty attempts to give directions from the passenger seat, the staff keeps the car running properly, and the students sit in the backseat yelling, "Where are we going?"

Water aerobics, chili competitions, and faculty/staff choir

Outside of teaching, faculty and staff can have fun too

Faculty and staff members work on their upper body strength with arm cross overs. The faculty/staff water aerobics program began at 12:00 p.m. on Monday, Aug. 26. The aerobics program was held for 40 minutes every Monday and Wednesday at the ASU pool in the HPESS complex. The program was available for faculty and staff who had a just enough time to work off some unneeded stress.

Dr. Jim Steele of Facilities Management, Kimberley Johnson, a graduate assistant for Student Activities Board, and Nathan Spencer, a graduate assistant for the Leadership Program, all judges for the faculty/staff chili competition, talk about the chili that they have just tasted. The competition was held in the Ballroom of the Reng Center on Oct. 16. Winners were judged on the taste and creativity of their chili.

Practicing some Christmas songs for the upcoming holiday season, the faculty/staff choir share music sheets as they belt out some chords. The class began Sept. 26 at noon in the Fine Arts building.

Nathan Spencer "clears his palate" with a wheat thin before trying the fifth station's chili. Spencer was a graduate assistant for the ASU Leadership Program.

Labeth Nall, the Assistant Dean of the Reng Center, waits for the judges to come to her table. Nall had an ace up her sleeve that ensured her to win, a secret ingredient that only her dog Glory knew, thus the name of her chili, Glory Hallelujah Chili. Because of that secret ingredient, Nall won the competition. The contest was sponsored by the Student Involvement and Leadership program. Small trophies were awarded to each contestant, the largest of which going to Nall.

With free weights in hand, the faculty/staff water aerobics program works on their triceps. Cindy Albright, Ph.D., assistant professor and BSE instructor, led the class pro bono. The class consisted of 20 plus faculty and staff, which met during the fall and spring semesters.

Mr. Larry Ross, a pastor at Christian Methodist Episcopal Church, pins a small angle to the lapell of Dr. Vance at her retirement reception. Although Mr. Ross isn't an ASU graduate, he said that he still bleeds Indian Red.

Dr. Darren Smith, an associate professor of reading, looks over one of the two displays holding pictures from Dr. Vance's past. Smith was a colleague of Dr. Vance, working with her in the College of Education.

Mrs. Nancy Bacot, the master of ceremonies and an advocate of early childhood education, begins the reception with Dr. Vance sitting close by. Bacot and Dr. Vance had been friends for over 30 years. Dr. Vance was the longest tenure on the faculty at ASU, working for more than 54 years.

Woodie Sue Herlein, a resident of Jonesboro and the Coordinator for ASU Childhood Services, overlooks a photo album of past events and places of Dr. Vance's long illustrious career in the field of education.

Dr. Mildred Vance, whom the reception was held for, speaks to her friends and family, all gathered to honor her. Dr. Vance said, "I really love ASU and I don't intend to call it quits here, I intend to support the school anyway I can."

Dr. Carole Campbell, a teacher of early childhood education from Seattle, Wash., writes a little greeting to Dr. Vance at one of the booths set-up. Dr. Vance's many achievements ranged from the first ever Outstanding Faculty Member Award for teaching to the Southern Early Childhood Association Outstanding Member Award and also the ASU Alumni Association Distinguished Alumni Award received in 2002.

Alison Craddock, a custodian at Twin Towers, picks up the days trash from the lobby. Custodians cleaned from dawn to dusk at the dorms, so students would have a clean environment to live and work in. The dorm custodians were responsible for keeping all of the halls, stairwells and common living areas clean, while students were responsible for their own rooms.

Philip Jackson, the Staff Senate President, addresses his fellow members of the senate at the beginning of the meeting. The Staff Senate was a set of people that watched over the needs and interests of the non-faculty employees of the university. The members were there for the purpose of expressing concerns to the university concerning non-faculty employees.

Carolyn Douglass, Carol Barnhill and Randy Martin, all Staff Senators, look over their minutes of the previous meeting. The Staff Senate was developed to inform the University administration on issues that were affecting the campus employees.

Staff members listen and take notes as the meeting gets underway. The staff were defined as full-time, non-faculty employees who had fringe benefits. Some part-time employees were included as well.

The staff of the university was represented by part and full-time employee's with the help of the EEO, equal employment opportunity. The University held classifications such as Skilled Crafts, Secretarial/Clerical and computer tech's, just to name a few.

At the Town Hall meeting, held in the Fowler Center by the Staff Senate, President Wyatt addresses the Staff Senate. The president and vice president's were not able to join or become members of the Staff Senate. The Mission Statement of the Staff Senate was stated as, "We pursue and share knowledge within a caring community that prepares students in challenging and diverse ways to become more productive global citizens."

George Purvis, a sophomore from White Hall, participates in the Greek Week dunking booth. There were many activities that took place during this fun-filled week that was meant for Greeks to get to know each other better and for non-Greeks to learn more about the Greek system. Purvis was a Sigma Chi.

The Sigma Phi Epsilon house sits in ruins a week after a fire ravaged the house. After a semester of police and insurance investigations the house was torn down. Arson was determined to be the cause of the fire but no arrest had been made six months later. The house was vacant due to the fraternity being placed on a four-year suspension during the 2001-2002 school year.

Katie Hottel, freshmen sports managements major from Jonesboro, cinches up her horses saddle as she prepares to ride in the Equestrian Center. The center was open to students and faculty to board horses and for students to take classes to learn to ride. Hottel said she took the class "to learn how to ride horses, plus it is fun and my family rides them so I can ride with them."

Work continues on the ASU Family Housing Apartment Complex. The apartments were built to replace the old trailers at the corner of Pawnee Street and University Loop. The remaining buildings were scheduled to be open by the 2003 fall semester.

Grover Welch, a junior journalism major, enjoys his first month in a new family student housing apartment. The apartments were open to married students, students with children or non-traditional students. The apartments came with some furnishings provided, including a couch and beds. The first section of apartments opened in January.

The Long Haul

An aerial map of the Arizona State University (ASU) campus. The map shows various buildings, including the Student Center which is labeled 'Under Construction'. It also shows Caraway Road and University Loop. The map is a stylized illustration with green areas for lawns and trees, and grey areas for buildings and roads.

Student Center Under Construction

As this school year closed, our “long haul” came to an end. For most, continuing with classes was a reality, but for some, college life was over and the “real world” was beginning to take hold. Construction was still apparant on campus, especially with the closing of Caraway Road. The new Reng Student Services Center was beginning to take shape and was beginning to look more like a building than a pile of metal and concrete. The parking lot at the intersection of Caraway Road and University Loop was closed during the holiday break as construction began on the new Biosciences/Biotechnology Building. As more green netting and chain link fences went up, campus became more pedestrian friendly. No matter if you were leaving ASU to begin a new journey in life, or returning to finish this one, everyone still had maps to create and roads to travel.

The 80th edition of the Arkansas State University Indian was printed by Jostens Printing and Publishing Company, 4000 S. Adams, Topeka, Kansas 66601. Mary Nell Sparks and Natasha Cole were the company sales representatives and Judy Huffaker was the inplant customer service representative.

Photographs were taken by staff photographers, ASU Sports Information, ASU News and Information Services and other freelance contributors. Photos were processed at Midsouth Photographic Specialties, 2502 Glenwood Drive, Jonesboro. Digital class portraits and Greek portraits were taken by Child Art Studio in Paragould. All group photos were taken by staff photographers or were courtesy of the organizations.

The press run for the 2003 Indian was 4,000 copies. Glossy 80# paper stock was used. The cover was designed by the 2003 editorial staff and Jostens Creative Services. The cover was Firebrand 497 with a custom die for front and back lid. End sheets were designed by Mary Reed, Indian Graphic Artist, and printed on Snow White 280 stock with Black 395 and Mars Red 187 ink.

Caption copy was 9-point Palatino normal. Headlines were Olive Oil 42-point, 72-point and 14-point set in Bold.

All elements were typeset in PageMaker 7.0 using Windows XP Professional operating system on Dell computers.
